

Dr. Xiang-Jin “X.J.” Meng is a University Distinguished Professor at Virginia Tech, an elected member of the U.S. National Academy of Sciences, Fellow of National Academy of Inventors, Fellow of American Academy of Microbiology, and Fellow of AAAS. He received his PhD in immunobiology from Iowa State University and completed his postdoc training at U.S. National Institutes of Health. Dr. Meng studies emerging and zoonotic viruses with a focus on developing vaccines and is an inventor of 22 awarded U.S. patents on virus vaccines, including the first U.S. government-fully licensed commercial vaccine against porcine circovirus type 2 (PCV2). He has published more than 367 peer-reviewed papers with an h-index of 106 and >41,056 citations.